GUIDELINES:

The Oral Reports will be given in our classroom, and all students in the class are expected to be present for the reports of each of the teams. Each oral report must last no more than 20 minutes – including questions from the class (and me) and time for transition between teams. NOTE: This gives you no more than 15 minutes of actual presentation time, so you have to be concise and to the point.

Each team’s report should be given by one or two persons, since that is the best way to assure a cogent and coherent presentation within the 15 minute limit. However, every member of a team should play an appropriate role in the research and discussion leading up to the report.

Use of presentation aids are up to you. However, visual aids (diagrams, overhead projector transparencies, etc.) will probably be needed for your explanation of the technical problems, and they might make other aspects of your presentation more efficient and understandable. Full-blown PowerPoint presentations are not necessary, but if you use one, please be economical re the information on the slides and please speak to the audience rather than the screen.

Remember, your goal is for the audience to understand the full range of factors – technical, managerial, ethical – that caused the disaster – and to see an alternative path – technically, managerially, ethically – that would have been disaster free.
